

Dr. Martin Reinhardt is an Anishinaabe Ojibway citizen of the Sault Ste. Marie Tribe of Chippewa Indians. He is an assistant professor of Native American Studies at Northern Michigan University. His current research focuses on the relationship between humans and indigenous foods of the Great Lakes region. He has a Ph.D. in educational leadership from Pennsylvania State University, where his research focused on the educational provisions of treaties. Dr. Reinhardt has previously served as a member of the Michigan Indian Education Council, chair of the American Association for Higher Education American Indian/Alaska Native Caucus, and external advisor for the National Indian School Board Association.